

Litigation Strategy in a Slower Economy: What In-House Counsel Should Rethink Now.

In "Litigation Strategy in a Slower Economy: What In-House Counsel Should Rethink Now," (Expert Opinion, NYLJ, July 24, 2025), Felicello Law managing partner Rosanne Felicello discusses potential scrutiny of legal spend during economic uncertainty.

She notes, "depending on the nature of the dispute, it may be financially prudent to aggressively pursue certain claims that may have greater relative value in financially uncertain times." She adds, "The challenge is determining how and when to allocate resources for litigation to maximize the value achieved for your company."

The article discusses the factors to consider as an in-house attorney, such as focusing on high-value claims, cost-effective strategies, and early settlements. She highlights the importance of planning with experienced counsel to align legal actions with business goals and control costs during economic uncertainty.

To read the article, click here.